,Facebook has a pretty good reputation for targeted advertising. People share so much information on Facebook that the world ' s largest social network has a tremendous amount of data that is invaluable to advertisers. Now, they ' re giving advertisers yet another way to target. InsideFacebook isfrom Facebook outlining a few different types of Interests Targeting, and one of those is Topic Targeting. This will allow advertisers to get fans of certain topics (which can include specific brands/celebirites) without being limited to those who " like " the official page. Facebook explains, " Topics (indicated with a # symbol) combine overlapping precise interests to enable easier targeting. For example, the ' #Lady Gaga ' topic will capture people with related interests such as ' Lady Gaga ' , ' Lady Gaga Fans ' and ' Lady Gaga Music ' . Topics are available in the Precise Interests election box. " " If you know that your ideal audience is likely to have a particular set of interests, but don ' t need to manage a complicated list of keywords, Topic targeting is a simple way to reach your customers without having to select every relevant term separately, " says Facebook. Other options Facebook offers in Interests Targeting are precise interest targeting and broad category targeting. The former are the exact likes and interest people have shared in their Facebook profiles, and the latter consists of broad categories that combine interests and other profile content users have shared such as " Jazz/Blues " or just " Music " . Earlier this month, Facebook began making its Ads API available to app developers who are able to demonstrate the creation of added value of Facebook advertising via third-party apps., Prada bags are drooled over and lusted by almost every woman. That ' s why, when Toyota decides to debut their new model online with a heavy social media push, it ' s newsworthy. To introduce the newest model of the Camry, Toyota is live on their official site, and, in fact, they are scheduled to show the first one roll off the factory floor in Georgetown, Kentucky during the broadcast. Of course, to celebrate the new Camry ' s reveal, Toyota took to the social media networks, namely Twitter, to share the news:, Toyota USA Join us right now for the live webcast of the all-new 2012 Camry launch!via&middle dot; powered by There ' s a lot of information coming out during the broadcast, which is still going on. For the tech sector, the vehicle will include access to Microsoft ' s Bing search engine – one wonders if that includes free GPS – as well as the option to stream Pandora to the vehicle ' s stereo. This latter piece of information is valuable in the sense that Pandora in the car sounds like a direct threat to the Sirius satellite radio service. As for Bing, well, that gives them a boon over Google, but it ' s doubtful such a designation will tilt the scales in Microsoft ' s favor when it comes to search dominance. Nevertheless, to be included in such a popular vehicle can only be considered a plus for Bing. The prices of these new models will vary from $24,725 to $25,900 for the hybrid model, which, according to the release, is lower than the 2011 rates. Twitter confirms this price drop as well:, Tim Hurst Toyota ' s boldest step with new Camry? They are cheaper across the board.via&middle dot; powered by Another point brought up by the presenters has to do with NASCAR ' s use of Toyota parts and other car content. Because Camry and its parts are built in the United States, from Toyota ' s perspective, no other car running in NASCAR uses more American-made content than Toyota does. For a little more perspective, I steer you towards, and the following quote:... St. Angelo, a 30-year General Motors employee before moving to Toyota in April 2005, is referring to one of Toyota ' s most popular talking points. The civilian versions of the three cars that compete in the NASCAR Nextel Cup series — the Chevrolet Monte Carlo, Dodge Charger and Ford Fusion — are built either in Canada (the Charger and the Monte Carlo) or Mexico (the Fusion). Meanwhile more than 75 percent of the parts used here by Toyota (and 98 percent of the steel) comes from U.S. suppliers....., While all of this is qualified as interesting facts in relation to Toyota and its Camry model, the way Toyota went about debuting the new model is the story. Simulcasting video and social media engagement has not been done in relation to the debut of a new car model, especially from a company the size of Toyota, and for a car as popular as the Camry. Does this mean we can expect Toyota ' s competitors to follow suit with their own exclusive video the next time the
